So we are now considered educated. At least in the formal sense we may suppose this to be true if we are to consider the acquisition of a Bachelor's degree as the final achievement of the educational process. And for all purposes society, or popular opinion, may consider that such an accomplishment merits recognition of the individual as an educated person. But we cannot be satisfied with any such narrow definition of education. The educational philosophy to which we have been recently exposed will not permit us to accept such a concept. We know that education is a continuing process that does not stop at the end of a particular period.

Convocation '50 is not a stop, then, but merely a pause. A time for reflection and assessment before progressing further. Despite whether some of us may go on to higher degrees, or abandon formal education at this point, we must of necessity continue with our own individual educational process. To stop now would be to deny the value of the past years.

Apart from any vocational skill we may have acquired during undergraduate years, our college training has provided us with some tools to aid in understanding the social, economic, political, physical, and spiritual basis of the modern world. It should also have made us aware of some of the basic problems that confront our materialistic society. And wary of attempts of evasion or dismissal, and skeptical of some of the widely held popular opinions regarding them.

Another Graduating Class!!

It seems impossible!!

K. E. Norris, M.A., Ph. D.

Principal

Sir George

Williams College

But it serves to emphasize the inevitable fact that the College is growing older, that it is no longer a new phenomenon in the Canadian Educational scene, and that the body of its Alumni is increasing in size and importance.

Like all its predecessors, this year's graduating class is the largest in the history of the College. It is a far cry from the present class of more than 200 people to the two men who were first to receive the College's degrees in the fall of 1936.

One approaches the idea of the graduation of a new class with mixed feelings of pleasure and regret - pleasure that this group of fine young people are about to have their efforts rewarded and are reaching, not the end of the trail, but another milestone along the way; regret that the College, which has learned to depend upon them for undergraduate leadership and tone, must now get along without them.

The list of this year's graduates includes an imposing array of those who have meant a great deal to Sir George Williams College in recent years, and who have contributed much to the life of the student body during their terms as undergraduates. To them, and to all members of the class, I offer congratulations and best wishes on behalf of the Board of Governors and the Faculty.

Mr Chairman,
Mr. Principal,
Honoured Guest,
Members of the Board of Governors and Faculty,
Ladies and Gentlemen.

Tonight I find myself in a very privileged position, for to me has fallen the task of saying goodbye to Sir George Williams College on behalf of this year's graduating class. The solemnity of the occasion bears testimony to its importance, for tonight we, of the graduating class, have reached the end of another stage in our progress. With the completion of each such stage we must look back, recall and evaluate so that in the light of the past, we may better foresee the future.

Many of us first came to Sir George for what we then termed a higher education. The very meaning which we attached to this term was a narrow and limited one. Most of us then conceived of education as that which we glean from text books and our esteemed professors; but tonight, as we look back, we receive a better understanding, a clearer conception of this term, tonight we realize that the word education means much more than the book-learning we receive at college. It includes the many values, the ideals and the attitudes which are developed as a result of our association with our fellow students. We have learned much since we first entered the narrow confines of this great institution. The very essence of its philosophies have become a part of ourselves. Proud that we were of an institution whose tenets are steeped in toleration, understanding, and progress, we proceeded to adopt these attitudes and develop these views. Students of many ideologies, of different races, and of different religions have learned to live together in mutual respect and admiration, have learned to disagree yet not be disagreeable. We are proud of the warm spirit of friendliness that permeates our halls, finds its way into our classrooms, and accompanies us on our many student activities. A spirit that binds student to student, professor to professor, and student to professor, when our days at college are but a memory we will still retain a vivid picture of these friendly relationships.

Perhaps some of you remember the mass protest meeting last year to speak out against the college's refusal to allow a certain political speaker to address a college audience. To some of you the crowded room of protesting and excited students may have stood out as a symbol of a free and democratic student body asserting its rights to hear and evaluate whatever political opinion they wished to listen to. To me that occasion holds other memories. I shall never forget the two senior members of the faculty who, amidst the excitement of the meeting, quietly slipped into the crowded room, and finding all the seats occupied, unhesitatingly sat down on the floor. To me that was a symbol.

Address by
Murray B. Spiegel
at the
Convocation
May 30, 1950

Amongst the finest treasures we take away with us tonight are the many friendships we have cemented here at college. When we first arrived at Sir George, strangers in a new environment, a little scared perhaps, we found adjustment a simple task, for wherever we went we were made welcome. From those first days on we made many friends. At our many sporting events, at our many club meetings and at our many dances we continued to meet these friends, strengthening the bonds between us as we went along until tonight we take with us friendships which in many cases will last throughout life.

We must not, however, allow the solemnity of the occasion, nor the happiness within us to blind us to the task ahead. We of the graduating class move into a world of turmoil, filled with antagonisms and moral chaos. We were educated and tonight we are graduated from a college which prides itself on its stress of the humanities. To us falls the task then of bringing our knowledge, our concern with fellow man and our acceptance of his worth to a world standing on the brink of another world war.

It is significant that this year the last large class of veterans is graduating. These men and women have done a great deal for our college. They have brought maturity and stability to its premises and have instilled in their fellow students a sense of purpose. These men and women know the horrors of war, they understand the meaning of privation, they know the value of peace and security. These men and women along with their fellow students, I am sure, will, in the light of the past, give honest leadership and guidance to the world of the future.

Colleges throughout Canada lament the passing of the mature influence of veteran enrolment. But at Sir George we have no cause for fear. An integral part of our college is the evening division, 2500 men and women who, engaged in the business world during the day, spend their leisure hours, in the evening, in study. Serious minded and conscientious, these students remain a solid foundation upon which Sir George will continue to grow in the years to come.

Fellow members of the graduating class, in a few moments we will become graduates of Sir George Williams College. Looking back upon our struggles and triumphs of the past four years we realize that we have a great deal to be thankful for.

To the board of governors and the faculty through whose help our stay at Sir George has been made a happy and fruitful one,

To the parents, the wives and the friends who have sacrificed so much to enable us to graduate tonight, and finally

To Sir George for building up our trust and faith in our fellow men, for giving us a place in the ever growing family of Georgians, and for giving us confidence to go ahead.

To all, in sincere appreciation we offer our thanks. It is our fervent hope that we may remain always worthy of your confidence.

In a century given over to a riot of Technology and Commerce, the B.A. is likely to feel obsolescent. He may, in his undergraduate years, have tried Chem. 101; possibly he has Physics 102; he may even have a credit in Accountancy - but generally speaking, he is more conversant with matters traditional. History, Languages, Philosophy and Literature have comprised his studies; all of which should give him a long face and a profound stare. Considering the times, it should also give him a furrowed brow. If none of the faces on the next few pages exhibit these particular features, the reason is attributable, we hope, to some further insight and assurance their studies have given them.

The B.A. during his years at College has come to see himself in an historical context. He has perspective now, and looks before and after. If, in the mirror of his thought, he sees reflected a world where explosion is everywhere imminent, he contemplates it with an assurance that transcends complacency and goes deeper than optimism. If the mirror gives him the violence of his own time and place it also shows him the past. He sees the centuries since Greece; he can follow History across Europe and perceive in the dark grief of human flux where the white names burn and the achievements gleam. Man's hope he sees in Man. In the ongoing of human history he values his place: the past he knows is always dark and the future darker. Believing this and having faith, he strives with good men everywhere to strike a light to take us forward.

The faces of the graduates in the next few pages should be carefully scrutinized. That these faces have bright, healthy features is a tribute to the modern, air-conditioned laboratories in which their owners have sought scientific knowledge; and we hope that other freshman classes will also come from such hardy stock. But it is not the somewhat mystical concept of hygienic vigour which should be noted but also the physical characteristics of the visages, for purposes of future recognition.

Who knows what influence these graduates may have on our civilization, or on the lack of it? Already, our chemistry graduates, continuing the brilliant research work begun in other years, leave college with deeper insight (or smell) into the biochemistry of  $\text{H}_2\text{S}$  and  $\text{NH}_4\text{OH}$ . It is now possible to state with almost definite certainty, in other words, it can be scientifically postulated that human beings can live in an atmosphere devoid of oxygen but rich in  $\text{H}_2\text{S}$  and  $\text{NH}_4\text{OH}$ , for 10 continuous hours without undue deterioration of the stomach-lining resulting.

Look at the faces, fellow-graduates. Among them you will see the designers of time, the regenerators of infinity. You will find the inventor of truly permanent permanents, the builder of thinking machines which will enrich humanity with sublime poetry, (Directions:- Press button No. 5 for iambic pentameter), or the creator of edible plastic dishes to complement the food.

Now turn the page if you dare.

COMMERCE '50

Spread over the next few pages are the pictures of this year's recipients of the degree of Bachelor of Science (Commerce). To be sure, many of these students are not newcomers to the world of business for many have already started the climb up the ladder to commercial fame and fortune. And to these few such words of advice beginning "You are now entering upon a career in world of business . . . ." are hardly applicable.

Highly trained in the intricacies of high finance, the latest in modern accounting systems, up-to-date on present day methods of credit, collections, "How to write a successful sales letter", and capable of writing "advertising copy that sells", and initiated into the commercial aspects of the legal process, the successful Commerce graduate seems well-equipped with the necessary tools to attain at least a moderate degree of success in the ever-expanding world of modern business. Although, despite the possession of these modern techniques, we've heard more than one Commerce grad admit that he had trouble managing his D.V.A. income.

Without making any rash predictions it is quite possible that a small proportion of our Commerce grads may eventually become a 'captain of industry', a 'corporal of finance', or a 'colonel of commerce'.

BACCALAUREATE ADDRESS

H. F. Hall, B.A., L.R.E.
Dean

One dictionary defines a baccalaureate address as a farewell speech to a graduating class. If that is the case it is perhaps not inappropriate that an official of the College, rather than an outsider, should be asked to give the address. However, this places a heavy responsibility on me for it means that I have to speak for the faculty and, in the second place, it means that this is my last chance to talk with you at least officially.

As to speaking for the faculty, I feel sure that I cannot adequately do so. There is little chance of agreement among them with most of which I shall have to say. That is probably a good thing. It means at least that you have been exposed to various points of view and that whatever shortcomings you see in us you can never accuse us, as an institution, of trying to indoctrinate you with one particular philosophy of life.

At least there is something which I can say to you with which, I am sure, the whole faculty will agree. That is that it has been stimulating to know you and that we sincerely wish you well.

The class of 1950 is the largest in the history of the College. Your convocation will be the fifteenth at which I have had the honour to present the individual members for degrees and the fifteenth at which Principal Norris has presented the degrees. Every class has its own characteristics and you have others beside that of being the largest. Many of you are veterans of the world's greatest conflict which closed five years ago this summer. Some of you are graduates of the College's Claremont Division through which so many young men and women (all veterans) obtained admission to this and to other colleges. Many of you are members of the now historic "J" and "S" classes who worked along with us through hot summers and long winters to gain what you have now achieved. The memories of those strenuous but fast moving months and years will always be a part of your college experience.

Many of you are evening students who have had an even longer college life. I'm sure I shall be excused if I say a special word of commendation to those few who were established undergraduates here before the war and who went away to serve in various capacities and are now, after further years of effort, achieving a long-sought goal.

Many of you are, of course, not veterans, for a whole college generation has had time to come and go since the war ended. Perhaps you too deserve special commendation for it must have seemed to you, at times, that the veterans were getting all the attention. To say the least it must have been trying not to be able to call the Bursar's office to collect a government cheque at the end of each month!

Now you are about to graduate, what can I tell you? May my last word be one of encouragement and of inspiration. Not all will agree with my ideas but may I ask you to believe that they are deeply sincere?

After an orgy of examinations, accompanied I fear by a certain amount of cramming, it would not be difficult to carry away the idea that to many the mere ingestion of the raw materials of knowledge is the most important thing. Far be it from me to deprecate knowledge, but of itself it is of little worth. "Though I have all knowledge I am nothing." As I see it the greatest need of our uneasy, materialistic world is a practical belief that "the development of persons" is the greatest thing in the world.

Delivered
to the Class of 1950
at the
Baccalaureate
Service
Sunday
May, 28.

The other evening there sat in my office a young man whom I had never seen before. He said that he did not see how he could do it but that he wanted to attend college. When I asked him why he looked rather shy and then braced himself and said, "You may think I'm crazy but I look at life this way. I have only one life and when I get to be sixty or seventy I want to be able to look back and feel that my life has counted for something worth while." I hope that that is the way you feel today.

Hedonism, in all its various forms, is one of the prevailing philosophies of our age. The pursuit of pleasure is a natural reaction to the perplexing combination of circumstances which face such an age. But hedonism always has a sting in its tail! Whether it be the ancient precept, "Eat, drink and be merry for tomorrow ye die" or the modern counter-part, "Enjoy yourself, enjoy yourself; it's later than you think", the hedonistic guides are always Job's comforters. I would rather say to you, "Work and strive for tomorrow ye live."

A thoughtful student, a member of this class, recently said to me that in college we are taught to question all things and that is good for us except that we never question very seriously the prevailing basic materialistic philosophy of our age. Well I would like to question it today. I still suggest that "A man's life consisteth not of the abundance of things he possesseth". I still suggest that faith and love are your greatest possessions - faith in divine purposes in the universe, faith in yourselves and faith in the unity of mankind as the children of God.

Finally, may I warn you, as I have previous classes, that education is not an imperishable commodity. An old teacher of mine once wrote that nothing, except religion, disintegrates as fast as education once the seeking for it stops. You have, I hope, the foundation of a good education but whether you let it disintegrate or build upon it depends on you.

You stand at the threshold of the second half of the twentieth century. In spite of its problems the world, to you, should be young, challenging, and fresh as the dawning of a new day. In this spirit may you, "Go forth to serve thy country and mankind".

First meeting of the Vets Luncheon Club.

L'il Abner and Daisy Mae being interviewed for The Standard.

"THE J-GROUP"

The invasion was on. Armed with glistening brief-cases and bristling pens, the Veteran Brigade moved-up from all sides. As it neared the Y.M.C.A. building, it deployed for the "attack".

One column took the Stanley pass, the other the Drummond pass, and forged ahead into "Y" territory.

Jealous, Georgian stares bombarded them and inviting Georgette smiles popped their eyes out, but they were a hard-bitten Veteran Brigade and they moved on unflinchingly.

There at the foot of Hill Metropolitan the two columns merged again, yelled their frenzied Hurrahs, then quieted down to take bearings. Now it was a sure thing that objective Willingdon Barracks lay right ahead at the top of the hill.

The little Brigade of eighty clambered cautiously up the foreign slopes of Hill Metropolitan, but caution was unnecessary, the "enemy" was not firing at all. On the crest of the hill lay the Willingdon Barracks behind the camouflage of a mahogany door. The patrol tapped gently at the camouflage and it eased itself inward to reveal the gapingly empty Willingdon Barracks.

"All Clear!" waved the Patrol, and the Brigade moved in and occupied the barracks, and waited.

One by one the "enemy" Chiefs of Staff trickled into view - Field Marshall, Henry Hall; Major General, Douglas Burns Clarke; Brigadier, Robert Fraser and Lieutenant, Tom Sterling.

Field Marshall Hall bent over so that his white flag of surrender would show and breathed soft words whose candour was to disarm to the core the steel-girt hearts of this battle seasoned brigade. "Gentlemen, gentlemen", his voice wafted on the hushed air, "Welcome to Sir George Williams College."

And the host of gentlemen rose and with one accord intoned: "Shepherd, we are the ones who surrender this day; we are thy willing sheep". And they saw a halo of blessedness wreath the head of Shepherd Hall as he rejoined: "Ye are my chosen; among my many folds, ye shall be known as the 'J-GROUP'".

And from that day in January 1947, the J-GROUP, sensing the sacredness of its self-charged mission, began to blaze its glorious trail across the jewelled annals of Sir George.

This D.V.A. dollared group battled with "re-orientation to study", forced down its diet of biscuits and pea-soup and guinea-pigged itself into showing that on this completely devitamized hash that sixty bucks a month permitted, it was still possible to survive Mathematics 101, Physics 101, History 103, English 124 and English 101, and with bleary eyes and puttied brain nevertheless go on to find actual enjoyment in Shepherd Hall's Natural Science 101.

Orientation to study and the acquisition of D.V.A. size stomachs were not the only battles the J-GROUP had to fight; there was the blistering heat of that summer to be endured. Baked brains could not cope with a full eight hour program of lectures and study, so extra-curricular activities became the order of the day.

Julias Stracina - Group Chairman and Stan Yaffe - Treasurer got together with Keith Mosher, Penny Kondaks (the only ewe in the fold), Cecil Kirton and Roy Horner and arranged swim and dance socials, bus trips, golf and tennis tournaments, basketball and volleyball "bouts" and floor hockey "Mayhems".

But there were times when the sweltering heat bogged down all organized sports and recreational programs and then the thing to do was to drift down to the "trough" or the Common Room for the day's treat.

There in the "trough" a Paul Ryan and Duncan Stevens would be furrowing their foreheads in earnest philosophical theorization over the thing in the cup of coffee - whether it was a piece of straw or a fly, a "he fly" or a "she fly", or not a fly but a bug, or not a fly nor a bug, but just hallucinations - just a mass hysteria.

In turn too, there would rise up a Stan Yaffe and take his precarious perch on the jerky table. There, hastening wit with frantic gesture, he would laboriously contrive to hatch successful "skin-teeth getters" but evoke laughter only through the sheer "unlaughability" of his lame fabrications.

With all these things happening in the J-GROUP it was inevitable that Owen Rowe and Tom Dolan would edit the "Little Georgian" to record it all.

Upon its yellow pages the "Little Georgian" also exhibited the creative outpourings of the group's high-brows.

It was a marvel - the way compliments never went to the heads of these literary luminaries. For instance, when the Editor once used the words "Yawn and turn the Page" to indicate to the reader his appraisal of the masterpiece above, the author swallowed down this "compliment" without in the least letting it go to his head. This modest nonchalance showed-up again in the smooth reactions of the J-GROUP's "Suitors of the Muse" when they saw their timeless gems lumped together and emblazoned on the "sacred" territory of the PEWTRID POETRY PAGE.

Not all the "Little Georgians" bared their empty bellies as rough-notes paper for scribbling J-GROUP pens; there was a special something about the yellow "Little Georgian" of September 8th which prevented this. You could sense it in the eager, expectant eyes of the J-GROUPERS and in their cautious, almost nervous handling of the pages. For this final "Little Georgian" was heralding the approach of the September exams, and with their completion, the disbandment of the J-GROUP - the regrettable breaking-up of that unique setting in which this Society was coaxed to thrive.

But the qualities of grit, cheeriness, altruism and leadership, so overflowingly evidenced in intra-J-GROUP relationships did not atrophy through removal from the promptings of a hitherto unique setting; those qualities continued to radiate from every J-GROUPER, strewn in every scattered fold of the College.

ED FEE has been 2nd Year Representative in 1947-48 and President of the S.U.S. in 1949-50;

PHIL McLEOD has been Day Editor of the Georgian in 1948-49 and also "Reader" for the English 101 Department;

PENNY KONDAKS has been Nathan Lande Scholarship winner for her outstanding scholastic achievement in 1948-49;

ELSTON ROBERT has been front page art decorator of more than one Georgian special issue and "Reader" in the English 101 Department as well;

CECIL KIRTON has been twice Treasurer of the Veterans' Society;

JULIUS STRACINA has been Delegate to the National Conference of Veterans in Toronto in 1948 and President of the Political Problems Club in 1949-50;

OWEN ROWE has been President of the Table Tennis Club in 1949-50 and subscriber to the Georgian and the Drama Guild;

TOM PLUNKETT has been the peerless Editor of the Georgian in 1948-49, "Reader" in the English Department and Editor of this year's Graduation Annual;

COLIN MACKIE has been founder of the Veterans' Scholarship Fund and this year's recipient of the S.U.S.'s MAJOR AWARD.

Still other J-GROUPERS have shown their fine mettle, but they have been content to do so outside the range of publicity's spotlight. And still others might have done Herculean service to the College, but they had migrated to other institutions of higher learning or had branched off into the business world or had boomed themselves into marriage and found this institution for personality grafting so happily rewarding, so all embracing, that College could wait indefinitely.

Out of the 78 members of the now scattered J-GROUP fold, 32 are graduating this year. Their hearts are swelling with the hallowed memories of all that transpired within the span of their eager invasion and their reluctant evacuation.

As they depart, they carry with them into the far flung, diverse arenas of life the crystallized habits of optimism, altruism and leadership, fostered and rewarded in the unique environment of "Sir George".

They came as Veterans with a legacy of training in the art of obliterating life. They leave with a legacy of grooming in the art of promoting life, of making it vegetate and blossom to its fullest stature.
